

British Film Institute welcomes Media Yeovil College learner for Filmmaking workshop

Emma Domoney, 18, formerly of The Gryphon School, spent her half term break in October in Bridgwater for a British Film Institute (BFI) Filmmaking workshop at the Somerset Film @ The Engine Room.

The BFI workshop is designed to help talented 16-19 year olds to gain experience in filmmaking in camera work, lighting and editing.

Emma contributed to a 5 minute film and a blog that includes presentations and a journal of activities to enter into the BFI Short Film Festival Competition.

Emma said, 'It's a good opportunity to get started in the community. By completing this course it will help me to progress to get into university so I can achieve my career aspiration to work with Universal or Warner Bros.'

Emma is currently studying a Level 3 Creative Media programme, she hopes to progress to Bournemouth University to study Media Production.

The BFI is a registered charity founded in 1933 that awards Lottery funding to various film production, education and market intelligence and research projects, among others.

Photograph shows

Emma Domoney, 18, formerly of The Gryphon School